Great Resource for Moms Re-Entering the Workforce

Millions of educated, professional women temporarily leave their jobs to stay home and raise their children despite the hard work put into earning a degree and climbing the corporate ladder. So wouldn't quitting, even for a few years, kill a career?

A new website offers information for moms who may be re-entering the workforce after the birth of a child. At www.MomsNextMove.com, you'll find expert tips on how moms can successfully leave and then return to the workforce because they have chosen to spend time with their children.

The site includes a newsletter, blog, forums where women can share their ideas and experiences, and product reviews. The goal is to establish a dialogue which will change the shape of the American workforce in the future.

Toddlers Can Bond & Share Their Creativity

Young moms who love to paint, draw or do crafts have a show made just for them on BabyFirstTV. It's "Baby DIY," a new program aimed at helping moms to interact and get creative with their toddlers.

"All you have to do is have a willingness to get creative and have fun with your child," said Sharen Pearson, host of "Baby DIY," which airs on BabyFirstTV daily at 8 a.m.

"As a mother myself, I know how important it is spend just a few minutes with a child in a creative environment where they can get a lot more than just a smile and a laugh."

"Baby DIY," (The DIY, stands for Do It Yourself) is geared for moms who like being creative and for those who simply enjoy spending quality time with their children.
